Did you know? Studying on UCEAP in Africa or the Middle East can cost less than staying at UC.

These approximate figures compare the average UC budget (off campus) with the average, most recent costs of UCEAP semester immersion programs for undergraduate, in-state residents. Average monthly living expenses include room and board, transportation, books, supplies, and other incidentals and do not include recreational travel or entertainment. Non-Resident Fees apply: If you are subject to out-of-state tuition at your UC campus, you will pay the same fees on UCEAP.

Financial Aid and UCEAP

We’ve Got You Covered. With UCEAP, you remain enrolled in UC and eligible for UC grants while abroad, and your UC financial aid budget is adjusted to cover all program costs—from tuition and airfare to books and shampoo. Our dedicated finance experts work with your Financial Aid Office to ensure timely and seamless disbursement of aid. If you do not currently receive aid, you may qualify when you study abroad.

Scholarships Just for You. More UCEAP scholarships are available than ever before, and you may qualify for extra funding. UCEAP scholarships will effectively reduce your debt if you take out education loans. Whether you have financial need or simply want to study in a unique location, there is likely a UCEAP scholarship suited for you.

“Hand on” involvement

We never learn much about Africa growing up, but the company and atmosphere provide the best learning environment for any student. People in Botswana get excited when you try to speak their language, and are flattered when you teach them your own. Soon you realize the simplicity of friendship and community, and learn a new appreciation for knowledge and education.

— Grant Ivison-Lane, UC Merced

Nursing courses at the university were very practical. I took classes in HIV/AIDS and midwifery. I also had a public health internship that enabled me to observe a variety of clinics.

I have never felt so passionate and driven. We got to work with the people, the local, regional, and national Ghanaian government, the Ghanaian media, and much more. UCEAP provided us with the base we needed to do it all ourselves. Coming back, I feel very inspired. The challenges we faced in Ghana have given me the confidence to pursue my interests with new energy.

Jeremy Kirshbaum
Founding Member: Rise Up Development Collective
UC Santa Cruz | Politics, Economics double major

Jeremy Kirshbaum went to Ghana in fall 2010, but his work continues today with the nonprofit organization he co-created, which focuses on developing the village of Wli Todzi in the Volta Region of Ghana. Founded by the UCSC junior with the help of friends and locals, Rise Up Development Collective (RUDC) promotes the remote village as an eco-tourism destination while raising funds for its much-needed health clinic. Currently, villagers in need of medical care must be carried by stretcher down a perilous 8-mile footpath to the base of the mountain. By utilizing social capital from a local and international community, RUDC enables visitors to experience village life as well as volunteer to help build the hospital clinic that will be vital to preserve and further Wli Todzi’s naturally rich culture and spirit. Find out more at www.riseupghana.org

Within the first month I absolutely knew I had to stay. Being in Ghana for the year allowed me to experience more of the rich culture and to continue my independent study project with local Ghanaian students. I gained a greater appreciation for the country and a new place to call my second home.

“I could not have chosen a better fit for my adventures abroad,” says Lisa Weisshar, Schusterman Israel Scholar and political science major. While pursuing her major and a minor in Jewish studies and Hebrew, Lisa took classes with world-renowned Jewish scholars and gained a deeper understanding of the Arab-Israeli conflict and interactions.

Outside of class, Lisa enjoyed being completely immersed in Jerusalem’s diverse communities. She returned to UCLA a seasoned traveler with memories of rappelling cliffs in the Negev, meeting the famous Shabbat a capella group, the Maccabeats, and exploring Israel’s winding markets and historic attractions.

“Though I already knew I wanted to be a citizen of the world, studying in Africa not only amplified that desire, but also made it a reality. The number one response I get from people when I tell them I studied abroad is ‘I wish I had done that!’ Just go. Everything will work out with your major, with money. It’s all worth it.”

After an exciting semester in beautiful Cape Town, Ramanpreet extended her stay to a full year. “I knew there was still too much to explore and experience,” she says. The additional time inspired and enabled her to immerse herself in the local community. Through SHAWCO, a student-run NGO, Ramanpreet tutored students from low-income households and served as Volunteer Coordinator for the law branch of the organization. She also had the privilege of studying at the UCT African Gender Institute, enhancing her majors in Women’s and Religious Studies. Even after an amazing and full year, Ramanpreet laments, “I still feel like I haven’t had enough of this place.”

Every week I had another adventure! I’ve taken road trips; explored the Namibian desert, the mountain Kingdom of Lesotho, and the diverse landscape of southern Africa; enjoyed unique fusions of food and culture; made lifelong friends from all over the world; and learned about post-apartheid South African society through courses and personal experience.

Grant Ivison-Lane | UC Merced

UC Merced student Grant Ivison-Lane experienced life as a Tanzanian. When he wasn’t riding a dalla dalla (bus) to his school internship twice a week, Grant enjoyed the small class sizes and program excursions to places like Zanzibar Island and the Udzungwa Mountains National Park. Living in Tanzania helped Grant fully explore the cultural influences that affect East Africa. He notes, "African culture has the strongest and most beautiful presence…I’ve learned more than I could’ve imagined.”

After Tanzania, Grant’s passion for studying abroad led him into southern Africa, where he recently completed the UCEAP Botswana program.
